

One Song, One Voice

This song is a recreation of Thomas Tallis' famous 40 part motet Spem in Alium in a contemporary music style for community choirs.

In the original, Tallis used 8 choirs of 5 voices each, whereas for this work we have 12 choirs of 3 voices, a total of 36 parts.

It uses the 3 part structure of Tallis' work:-

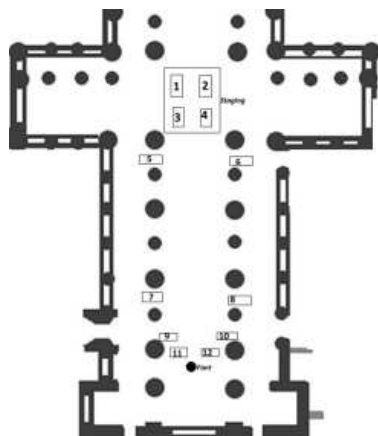

1. All the choirs sing together, each one gradually dropping out until Choir 12 is left singing alone.
2. A middle chorus with everyone singing (Letter B)
3. Beginning with Choir 1 at letter F, each choir joins in in order, until everyone sings a final chorus at letter G

The third section is built up out of repeated 4 bar patterns, a different one for each choir, which builds up as each choir enters until choir 12 enters at bar 144 when there is 36 parts.

Tallis' work is only really effective when it is heard as it was intended to be sung, in the round, and we would like to use the magnificent space of the cathedral to do the same, giving the audience a 'surround sound' experience with different parts coming from different sections of the building.

All the choirs at the beginning of this piece will be on or around the staging under the tower and, from there, we would like to move choirs 5- 12 down the nave with :- choirs 5 and 6 singing from between the first and second pillars from the tower, choirs 7 & 8 sing from between the fifth and sixth pillars Choirs 9, 10, 11 & 12 sing by the font (see the diagram below).

To do this the music from letter A to B is a canon sung at a measured pace allowing the choirs to move down the cathedral, with choirs 11 (which moves first), 9, 7 and 5 moving down the left hand passage between pillar and outside wall, and 12, 10, 8 and 6 on the right .
